The summertime in Finland is short but sweet. When summer rolls around, people there waste no time celebrating. During the summer season, many Finns love to spend time outdoors as the whole land is bathed in 24-hour sunlight, a natural phenomenon known as the midnight sun. Locals can enjoy numerous free concerts in city parks or they go to the sauna, which is the Finns' national pastime. As a country with more than 300 islands, Finland is perfect for island-hopping. Pihlajasari, famous for its sandy beaches, is just a short ferry ride away from the capital, Helsinki. People attracted by the beauty of the wilderness of the mountains can visit national parks located in Lapland, the northern region of Finland. The most well-known is Pallas-Yllastunturi. It has an easy 30-mile hiking trail that will take visitors through the true colors of the wilderness, as well as cabins where people can spend the night and take in the midnight sun. Lapland is also home to the Sami people, skilled hunters and reindeer breeders, and the only recognized native people in the European Union. The best place to learn about Sami culture is at Rovaniemi's Arktikum Science Museum, which has fascinating displays of Sami culture and arctic wildlife.
